NEW ENGLAND'S FORAGE CROPS This has been a queer season, but crops show results which hogs. leave no doubt that it has been most favorable for their growth. All over New England the barns are filled and in many sections the multiplying hay stacks tell of a surplus not so com mon in these parts, and the cat and rye crops are above the average.

Commenting upon this abundance of fodder, the Boston Transcript says: "We speak of wheat as one of the cornerstones of our prosperity, but the hay crop of the country has a valu of nearly three-quarters of a billion, and yield and prices have to be high make wheat surpass that value Moreover, it is peculiarly our crop, so we may feel that more than is usually case New England is sharing in the general agricultural prosperity One of the uncertain forage crops in recent years has been clover, but this year it has shown almost the luxur ance that once was expected only from virgin soil. It offers itself first to the cutting, and in many places the after math is almost large enough for a second yield, though it is better farm-ing to leave it upon the land, as it is one of the best conservers of nitro for dairy herds that there is with the exception of alfalfa, and in time we may add that to our staples."

INCREASING TRADE WITH SOUTH AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

That the commerce of the twent

Latin-American republics lying to the south of the United States is increasing with such remarkable strides that deserving of particular attention is proved by the special report of Director John Barrett of the International fourth Pan-American conference no in seasion at Buenos Ayres, the capital of the Argentine Republic. After pinting out that the work and cor respondence of the bureau have in used one thousand per cent. since the last conference in 1906; that las year it was directly responsible for $52,000,000 of new trade exchange in the Pan-American field; that it dis tributes annually 450,000 pieces of printed matter descriptice of Pan-American relations in contrast to 50,-000 four years ago; and that it has numerous ways for the promotion of home stretch with it secure Pan-american friendship, peace and commerce, the director says: The total of Latin-American foreign

SCIENTIFIC APPLE-GROWING.

"That the growing of apples has been neglected in New England to the extent that the full possibilities of the industry have not been realized is generally admitted, and, apropos of the discussion of the subject which has lately been aroused in all the New England states, the action of a group of farmers in the town of Wolcott, in Wayne county, N. Y., is worth making a note of. The growers there have organized an association, and will employ an apple expert tion, and will employ an apple expert oliege or the Geneva experiment station to spend the season in the town. He will be paid by the association, and will attend to the spraying and care of trees and superintend the harvest ing of the crop. Incidentally, it is to be assumed, he will make suggestion is to the marketing of the apples after hey have been harvested. It is a good dea, and it suggests also the increasng opportunities for the expert is agricultural and horticultural operaagement and conservation of forests.

The man of fashion is likely to carry a cane of a darker wood and heavier weight in winter, and a cane of lighter weight and color in summer, and he may carry one style of cane in the morning, another in the afternoon and still another in the evening. Besides pimento and snakewood, and lancewood, and rattan, canes are made of pariridge wood, and of malacca, and of Circassian walnut, and of many other fine woods in all sorts of shades in color, light and dark, including woods straight grained and of beautiful markings. The handles and caps are also to be found in almost endless variety.

Many fine canes are now shod with ferrule tips of horn instead of metal, the horn ferrule being lighter, making a better balance cane and being noiseless when it touches the sidewalk. A novelty in cane heads is one of silver made hollow for use as a cigarette casa, the cover fitting snugly and forming, closed, a continuous part of the handle. Such handles are also made with an additional little compartment for matches.
